From the Pastor's Desk

WRITTEN BY CINDY AND BEN LATTIMER

*It's early in the year. Not a bad time to consider
Your calling.
Just consider...*

*How has it worked for you?
Is your faith-life going the way you'd planned?*

Tracey Marx writes the above invitation and calls it a blessing. I wonder about the ways that difficult questions can be a blessing. I wonder about how my engagement with them is never wasted time, even when my heart or my head aren't sure I have time to sit and consider.

In worship during this season, we are trying to create time and space to consider. The series is called, "You're Invited..." In the scriptures we will be reading, Jesus makes several different invitations or one might say callings - to those in the story - and to those of us who are continuing the story. We often think of "call" or "calling" as limited to those who are in full-time ministry. But the reality is, all of us are called. And there are limitless ways we can respond.

As you listen throughout this series, perhaps you will hear an invitation - a calling - into something new, into something old, into a new way of thinking, or into a new relationship. Maybe your faith is inviting you toward healing work or re-engagement or a particular practice.

None of us needs "one more thing to do." But more of the right thing can be incredibly life giving. So I wonder - how will you respond to the invitation to consider your call? To ask difficult questions surrounding your commitment to the life of faith?

Tracey's blessing continues:

Then, for a moment, if you can Consider how God might be considering your calling.

*How pleased God may be with you.
How gently God may be trying to navigate just a bit differently.
How glad God is to be your traveling companion.*

*This winter, may you consider your calling.
And allow your considering to be a prayer
Where you remember that you are affirmed, guided, and accompanied
By the one who has called you and will never leave you.
And where you find just the right kind of rest in just the right amount
To then step back on the wild, wonderful journey.
Amen*

Piecing Together the Brethren Way - a Sunday School class for all ages

Held hybrid starting at 9:30am, Sundays from Feb. 19 - Apr. 2

To join in-person, meet in the Fellowship Hall.

A few years ago, on the Church of the Brethren's 300th Anniversary, our very own Joanne Thurston-Griswold helped create a Sunday School curriculum called, Piecing Together the Brethren Way. It's a beautiful series that tells the story of our "peculiar people." It's even accompanied each week by music - written and performed by Andy and Terry Murray!

We began this series last Fall. Whether you were a part of those 7 weeks or not, we hope you'll join us this Spring. The curriculum was originally designed for children - but it has the potential to create a unique intergenerational opportunity for our church family as well. And so we are inviting adults and youth to be a part of this time too. Not only does it provide a space for people of all ages in our congregation to learn the stories of our "great cloud of witnesses" who have passed the baton to us - it also gives us an important opportunity to connect the wisdom and experience and love of our adults with the children of our church - cultivating relationships that may bear fruit for generations to come.

The experience may be best for those joining us in person, but if health or geography make that impossible - you can still join in the fun over Zoom!

Ash Wednesday Service

Held hybrid starting at 7 pm on Sunday, February 22

This service is a good way to begin the season of Lent - remembering that God is present in all of our lives. We are planning this service in partnership with Juniata College Campus Ministry and so this is also an opportunity to connect with siblings in faith across a broad spectrum. We hope you will join us!

Lenten Art Devotional Series

Held online at 7 pm on Wednesdays beginning February 29

Join us for a time of reflection and discussion on pieces of original art inspired by each week's scripture lesson. You do not have to know anything about art to notice something meaningful and new. This time has been very well received by all who have attended, so we hope you will give it a try!

Charlotte's Web, Web of Life, World Wide Web, Corinthians, MLK

WRITTEN BY PAM GRUGAN

Charlotte's handiwork makes Wilbur and his plight known to the world beyond the Arable farm, but Wilbur's ultimate survival depends on every farm animal's contribution, even Templeton's. This community of barn animals sticks together the way Charlotte's web holds together. Each strand in the web connects to another. When one strand is weak or broken, the whole web weakens. But spiders are capable of repairing their webs the way humans can repair "the tie that binds." As a result, the web that holds the community together stays strong.

Many years ago Laura White led a Sunday school activity by helping the children create a model of the Web of Life. Laura gave each child a sticker to wear bearing the name of one element in the web. She then gave a ball of yarn to the child wearing the label "sun," the source of energy for (nearly) all life. The children passed the ball of yarn from sun to plants to herbivores and carnivores, predators, and decomposers, and back to the child with the sticker labeled "soil." The web the children created displayed, in Laura's words, how "the network of interrelationships comprising the Web of Life is so incredibly intricate."

One dictionary states that the World Wide Web (WWW) is "an information system on the internet which allows documents to be connected to other documents." Wikipedia quotes the Web's founder, Tim Berners-Lee, when referring to the system as a "universal linked information system." As daily users of this system, we stay connected with others in our social, employment, and service networks. We've come to depend on these connections and can hardly imagine dropping out.

In Paul's first letter to the Corinthians, he refers to that community as "the body of Christ." He references different parts of the body and their function and the way each part has a necessary role to play to keep the body whole. "If one part suffers, every part suffers with it; if one part is honored, every part rejoices with it," Paul writes. As with every web, each strand is connected to every other strand, directly or indirectly.

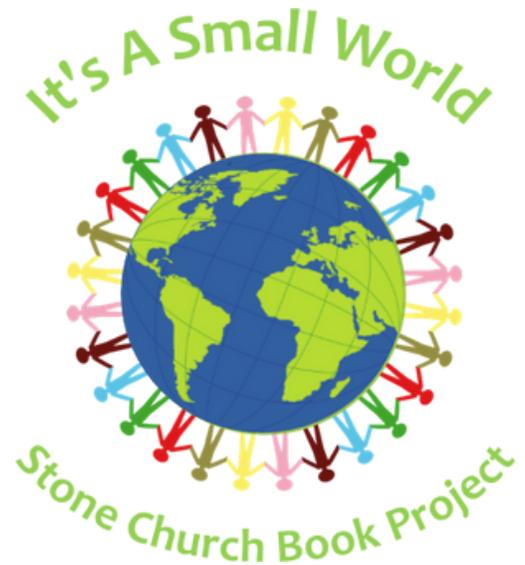

The Reverend Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. claimed in his Letter from a Birmingham Jail, "We are caught in an inescapable network of mutuality, tied in a single garment of destiny. Whatever affects one directly, affects all indirectly."

As we come to the last weeks of our year-long ISW Book Project Check Out Challenge, we are reminded of the title of the grant that initiated the project: Healing Racism. We rise up to the challenge of healing racism while we continue to read and learn, about our siblings in Christ, about the Black, Indigenous, and other People of Color, who have suffered, and the ways we can, together, bring about healing.

If Laura hadn't intentionally stopped the activity, it could've gone on and on, as the Web of Life, made up of multi-dependent relationships, does indeed go on and on.

It's a Small World Book Project: Check Out Challenge Update

WRITTEN BY PAM GRUGAN

It was a cold and snowy afternoon when I sat with Elsie and Catherine Weld at their kitchen table. Together we read The Proudest Blue by Ibtihaj Muhammad. Elsie identified this book as the one that stands out for her among all the books she has read from our ISW book collection. It's a story about two sisters, like Elsie and Catherine.

In Muhammad's story, the oldest sister Asiya wears hijab to school for the first time. While Asiya encounters some finger pointing, laughter, and whispering among her fellow students, her younger sister Faizah notices that at the end of the school day, Asiya is smiling. "Strong." Asiya serves as Faizah's role model, demonstrating her commitment to the traditions of her faith even when not everyone shows respect for her commitment.

When I asked Elsie if she would like to wear hijab to school, she replied, "I'd like one myself. I think it's pretty." And when I asked her what color she would choose, she enthusiastically called out, "Orange!" She volunteered that if she wore hijab for the first time to school, "I would be different, but I would still make lots of friends." And when I asked how her teacher, Mrs. Brooke Meadows, would support her, Elsie said, "She'd be proud of me because I stood up for what other people might not do."

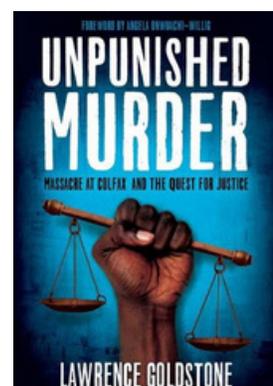

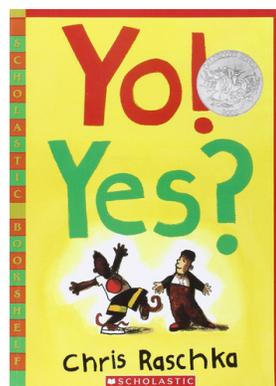

What became clear to me during this time with Elsie and Catherine was how Elsie saw herself in Faizah and her sister Catherine in Asiya. In the story, Faizah thinks of her sister as a princess, as Elsie thinks of Catherine. Faizah draws a picture of "two princesses in hijab." Elsie says, "I like drawing Catherine with me." There is also, of course, an obvious difference between the two sets of sisters. Unlike Asiya and Faizah's family, the Weld family has a faith tradition that does not (always) require a head covering, but if it did, for Elsie it would be The Proudest Orange, for sure.

On the same wintry day, Catherine and I talked about an ISW book, which she recommends. It's called Colorblind: A Story of Racism. The first thing Catherine noted was that Jonathan Harris, the author, is a teenager. In fact, Harris was just 15 when he wrote the text for this graphic novel, and Zuiker Press, "a husband and wife publishing company that champions the voices of young authors" published this book, which seemed to be what drew Catherine to it. She revealed, "I think it's more authentic. Sometimes teenagers and kids are less filtered and less afraid of speaking out."

Jonathan Harris demonstrates this kind of courage as he tells a very personal story, the story of his "desire to live my life under his guidance." By "his" Harris means his uncle, who is incarcerated. Harris references his heroes throughout the story, including his parents, his great-grandmother (the anchor of the family), Snoop Dogg (who put LBC, Harris's home, on the map), Nelson Mandela, Jackie Robinson (42) and Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., but it is Uncle Russell to whom Harris dedicates most of the pages of the novel. When Harris faces discrimination and racism on the soccer team, he remembers his uncle's guidance, "Finding common ground in our differences (is) the only thing that truly makes us all 'One.'" And so, Harris finds common ground with a soccer player on the opposing team, whose ancestors were Irish immigrants.

Catherine and I went on to talk about the attributes of the graphic novel format. "Sometimes it's hard to find a place to drop off, and you just have to keep going," she maintained, and "with pictures you can convey more emotions." I had a lot to do that day, but Catherine convinced me! I went home, sat down, started, and finished the book. (Thanks, Catherine! Colorblind is worth reading.)

And so are the 51 other books in our It's A Small World Book Project collection. If you haven't read any yet, there's no time like the present. If you can't find the ISW book you'd like to read in the back of the sanctuary, try the Huntingdon County Library or the Mount Union Community Library. They each have an ISW book collection, waiting to be read.

Stone Church Rings the Bell

WRITTEN BY JEANNIE LASHLEE

On the blustery first day of December, 8 people from Stone Church rang the bell for Salvation Army's annual Kettle Drive in front of Ace Hardware in Huntingdon. Those volunteers were Robert Lamey, Carolyn Lidston, Chris Gibboney, Emily Elder, Henry Elder, CC Elder, Andy Murray and Dennis Plane.

According to "Caring Magazine," a publication of Salvation Army, some of the ways that funds from the iconic red kettle are used include assisting families at holidays, providing shelter support, offering vocational training, providing emergency disaster services, feeding and clothing those in need, supporting programs for those recovering from addiction, providing gasoline vouchers and supporting children's programs.

When asked what he liked about ringing the bell, Andy Murray responded that he "loved watching the moon and stars come out, feeling the air turn crisp and Christmassy, greeting so many people I did not know and being a witness to their generosity." Chris Gibboney also commented on people's willingness to give adding that she likes seeing "the generosity of those coming in and out of the store and knowing that our presence reminds people to think of those less fortunate."

Dennis Plane didn't let a little thing like never having volunteered to ring the bell before get in his way. He had this to say about the experience, "It served as a happy reminder of the spirit of Christmas that can sometimes get lost in the hustle and bustle of the season." And volunteering has its own rewards as pointed out by the Elder children who enjoyed "getting to greet people and eat popcorn at ACE Hardware."

Our church is able to support ministries far away; but, it is a blessing to be able to help local ministries here in Huntingdon as well. Merry Christmas!

The Leadership Deficit

WRITTEN BY CHUCK YOHN

My Stone Church family is my warm, welcoming and supportive community that I greatly treasure. It takes many hands to daily create and recreate the places of belonging, spiritual connection and fellowship that define this church home. I feel truly blessed. However, I also feel troubled.

During the last several years, I have felt the growing difficulty of recruiting sustained leadership for our church endeavors. This has been manifest in our Gifts Discernment Team's struggle to recruit leadership for basic ministry teams. I have been pondering this situation for some time and have some observations to offer. First, I believe that this leadership deficit is not just a Stone Church phenomenon, but a societal issue. Not only are other congregations struggling to recruit lay leadership, other civic organizations are reporting the same issue. Second, this deficit is not an effect of Covid.

Although exacerbated by Covid, this issue was already a concern in Church leadership well before Covid stuck. Covid just made it worse. Third, this leadership deficit exists despite the fact that the spirit of volunteerism is alive and well at Stone Church. Counter to the trend of a steady decline in volunteerism at churches at a national level, volunteerism at Stone Church is high. We are empowered to say yes to help in all sorts of ways, but are struggling to say yes to the obligations of leadership.

In attempting to gain insight into understanding this leadership deficit, I have relied on some self-reflection to examine when I have been willing to say yes, and when I have said no. My conclusions make me uncomfortable. I have said no when my plate seemed full, when I was stressed and had no "band-width" for another responsibility. I had no time. The uncomfortable realization is that I have also said "yes" under the same circumstances. I have always had all of the time God gave me. The real difference was what I was willing to prioritize. My Stone Church family is my warm, welcoming and supportive community that I greatly treasure. In the daily maelstrom of distractions and competing priorities, God give me the wisdom to make Stone Church my priority.

2022 BUCK SEASON WRAP-UP

The Farmers' Market Bucks program, launched in 2010, had another successful year in 2022. Now under the auspices of the non-profit Huntingdon County Local Food Association, the Market Bucks program is a collaboration among Stone Church, the Huntingdon Area Forum of Churches, the Farmers' Market and a number of area community-service agencies. It involves locally-issued "market bucks" purchased for one's personal use at the market, for gift-giving, or for donating on behalf of low-income members of our community. Its purposes include encouraging us all to eat more fresh, locally-grown food; supporting local, environmentally-responsible farmers and our region's economy; and increasing access to the market for folks who otherwise couldn't afford to shop there.

Donated Market Bucks (or "Bonus Bucks") are distributed to recipients of SNAP benefits (Food Stamps) and WIC/Senior Farmers Market Nutrition Program vouchers when they shop at the market; they receive $1 in Bonus Bucks for every $2 of SNAP/voucher money they spend, extending their purchasing power.

Noteworthy in 2022:

- 5% of the value of all Market Bucks sold was donated to PRIDE, in the form of Market Bucks for use by their senior clients.
- 48 SNAP recipients patronized the market, 33 of whom were new SNAP customers.
- A vegetable encyclopedia with information on using 36 different kinds of produce was distributed free-of-charge to SNAP and FMNP customers at the market. Thanks to Stone Church for helping to sponsor the printing of this guide!

Market Bucks for the 2023 season will be available for purchase next year at the Farmers' Market. To all who participated in the Market Bucks / Bonus Bucks project this past season, many thanks on behalf of all of the partner organizations. Special thanks to Kim Roth, for helping out with sales, card-processing, and Bonus Bucks distribution. We welcome your feedback and/or your offers of assistance as we plan for 2023. # Seeking Unity and Peace

WRITTEN BY GENE GOSHORN

There is a great deal of division in our nation and world along political lines. Conservatives and liberals alike can lose sight of the greater good in holding to their ideologies. I fear for our future at times, remembering the 620,000 who died in our Civil War in the 1860s and many, including my own Uncle, who died in Anzio, Italy, with 767 Rangers during WWII. I do not want my grandchildren nor anyone else to suffer in another Civil War or World War. Perhaps if we were to remember the words of Jesus in Matthew 12:25, our future may be less tragic...

“Jesus knew their thoughts and said to them ‘a kingdom divided against itself will be ruined, and every city or household divided against itself cannot stand.’”

I offer this Apache prayer in closing so that we may be grounded in peace...

May the Sun bring you new energy by day.
May the Moon softly restore you by night.
May the Rain wash your worries away.
May the Breeze blow new strength into your being.
May you walk gently through the world and know its beauty all the days of your life.

2022 Pastors' Forum Report

AS PRESENTED BY CINDY AND BEN LATTIMER

For those of you who missed it, or who might want to hear it again, this was the pastors' report from January's congregational forum meeting. Look back with us at the year gone by - and dream together with us about where God might be leading us in the year to come...

Friends, siblings in faith, we are excited about what is ahead of us. As we have worked together with Leadership Team on these shared priorities, we are thankful for the many ways we have of showing who we are as the Stone Church Community by living faithfully together. This community - this family - this Body of Christ - has consistently lived its values over all the ups and downs of the last year.

Since our last January Forum, we have maintained a vibrant online attendance even as more and more people have joined us in the sanctuary for worship - that includes new faces that were not part of our community a year ago, and many who have been a part of this community feeling more comfortable in this public space. We baptized 2 individuals and accepted the transfer of letter for 13 others into our official membership. And we dedicated one baby. In all of these celebrations we promised to be for each other mutual support, challenge, nurture and care.

A promise we have remembered again and again as we have supported one another in more difficult times as well, through meals made, cards sent, prayer shawls shared, rides given, visits, calls and texts, and faithful prayers. We remember that we have lost parts of this family of faith - Joanne Krugh, Zilla and Jack Wagner, Bob Wagoner, Denny Rock, Lydia Price, Dale McClure - and we have encouraged one another through other losses - friends, colleagues, classmates, cousins, siblings, parents. This community has shown up for each other in all of the realities of life in the last year.

And that love and care has extended out beyond us as well. There was a stretch last summer where we had a time of blessing and commissioning 3 different weeks in a row as we sent leadership to the Church of the Brethren Annual Conference, delegations to Guatemala, and youth to National Youth Conference in Colorado.

And then more than 75 people from the community gathered on our lawn as we re-hung our "You are Loved" banner after it was torn down. In conversation with the Baker Institute for Peace and Conflict Studies - we forged new relationships and all committed to non-violence, to risky love, to meaningful self-care and self-reflection, to ongoing learning and difficult growth - even in the face of fear, of anger, and of hatred.

We have explored the Bible together - in all sorts of creative and life-giving ways. We are currently part of a group that is offering up reflections and insights that will be used in an Anabaptist Version of the Bible coming out in 2024. We have dared to look at the Bible alongside works of art - wondering together how what we see and read - when we do it together changes our perspective and helps us arrive at broader understandings of scripture,- of ourselves and of God. We took a grand expedition through the entire book of Isaiah in one worship service - that utilized the voices of more than 13 speakers - some of them in Hebrew - plus the voices of our choir who helped us enter the scripture through music from Handel's Messiah.

We have told stories together - stories of our own lives - stories of Brethren History - stories from the Bible. We have told stories in an intergenerational Sunday school class that featured the original music of Andy and Terry Murray - who faithfully sang it with us each week. The class averaged more than 35 people learning together from all age groups. We've told stories around meals - at Love Feast and Lisa Lunch and a Welcome Back picnic for the college students. We've heard stories from Dr. Dauda Gava from Nigeria, and from Jay Hosler reading to us from our It's a Small World Book project, from our very own C3. The story of this community continues to grow and expand. It continues to challenge and inspire all of us who choose to be a part of it.

We cannot list the full story of this year - we know we have left things out. Like 40 people gathered on Christmas morning, soaking in the love and wonder of the day or the laughter ringing from the sanctuary as a group sets up the worship center or pizza shared at OIP after caroling or the cookies you get if you come to in-person leadership team meetings. We cannot list all of the blessings of this year. What a gift.

And we are very aware that our story continues to unfold. That the work of living the Good news of Jesus continues to beckon us toward all manner of faithful living. Our shared ministry priorities are just a small sketch, a seedling of a hope for all the ways we will live and learn and love together over the next year in this family of faith. We are grateful for you. Grateful for the ways you participate and show up and lead and hope and care. Grateful to do life with you. And we are hopeful - excited for all that is to come. All of where we will go is not clear - but going together with you - with this community is truly something to cherish.

As we close in prayer, I invite you to stand as you are able....take a moment... look around at this community - all we have been to one another - all we are yet to become. The poet, Mary Oliver writes: "Sometimes, I need only to stand wherever I am to be blessed." Look around...and be blessed

Let us pray - eyes and hearts wide open if you choose...
For the gift of this community, God we give thanks. Strengthen us to continue to say yes to your call to be your hands and feet out in the world - and to each other. Empower us both to boldness and to humility, so that we might have the courage to keep learning as well as the will to keep moving. Thank you for your faithfulness in the last year - Be faithful in the year to come. Amen.
